Parallel" as Drawn by Grey's Note.

State Department Has Many Official Notes to Write Before Taking Up Mexican Trouble.

In the interval that is to elapse before another Pan-American conference on the Mexican situation is held, the atten tion of the State Department will be con centrated once more on a number of problems growing out of the controversies with the European belligerents. The two matters of greatest importance are the replies to the German note in the Frye case, and the several British notes defending their practices in inter-

Frye Note Drafted.

The reply of the United States in the Frye case has been drafted and probably will be submitted to the President in a day or two. No note to Great Britain has yet been drafted, but so much pre-liminary work has been done on that subject that no considerable delay is ex-taken by the administration of the op-portunity afforded by the British plea of Germany's action as justification for what England is doing to apply the same what England is doing to apply the same rule as was used with regard to Germany's attempt to blame her submarine campaign on Great Britain. Language quite similar to that used in the notes to Germany, informing her that the United States could not admit into its controvers, with Germany anything recontroversy with Germany anything re-garding Great Britain, will probably be found in the note to Great Britain.

Blockade May Be Unlawful. By some officials it is felt that the United States would be justified in de-claring that Great Britain, in admitting that her blockade is a retaliation for the submarine operations of Germany, has admitted by implication that her blockade is a reprisal, and therefore beyond the law. By others the opinion is held that Great Britain was clever enough in writing her note to stop just short of actually admitting that her blockade measures are to be viewed as

It is now certain that the American reply will concede practically nothing of the British argument, and that it will evade the "deadly parallel" of the American civil war cases by maintaining that he parallel drawn by the British is really not justified by the facts in the two

The suggestion has been made that the logical step for the United States is to concede the British contention that a blockade of Germany would be ineffective unless trade through neutrals in scrutinized, and then to declare that the proper conclusion from this fact is that the blockade should be abandoned, rather than that the rules of a blockade should be changed to suit the situation.
